Hello Andrew,

A green card identifies its holder as a U.S. permanent resident, with rights to enter, leave, work, and live in the United States—and to eventually apply for naturalized U.S. citizenship.

U.S. immigration laws give a variety of ways to individuals to apply for a Green Card. You may be qualified to apply for a Green Card (Permanent Resident Card) through your family, a job offer or employment, refugee or asylum status, or a number of other special provisions.

But before you consider applying for U.S. permanent residence, make sure you're qualified under one of the accompanying green card qualification categories:

- Green Card through Family. It pays to have a family member who is an American citizen, as long as you are close to them on the family tree – spouse, children, parent, fiancé, etc. Even permanent residents enjoy this privilege when it comes to their immediate relatives.
- Green Card as a Special Immigrant (EB 4). Religious workers wanting to be a part of a nonprofit religious organization abused minors, Afghanistan or Iraq nationals who have had a history of working with the US government, international broadcasters, and diplomats and their families, can all try their chances at going green.
- Green Card through Asylum or Refugee status. Pretty self-explanatory. If America has granted you asylum or refugee status, you will be eligible to seek a permanent residency in the country.
- Green Card for Victims of Crime, Abuse, and Human Trafficking. If you have endured cruelty and abuse at the hands of an American citizen, permanent resident, or in some cases an abused child or spouse of a Cuban national, you will be eligible to seek permanent residency. Also, victims of human trafficking or crime victims with a T, or U immigrant visa, are eligible.
- Physician National Interest Waiver. If you are a doctor who agrees to work in certain underserved areas, you might be eligible too.
- Immigrant Investor (EB 5). Do you have a million bucks? In dollars, that is. If you can spare it and invest in a commercial enterprise, in the US, you can claim a spot at the eligibility table as well.
